Lifestyle Management

The most effective way to gain more quality, free time in your life is to employ a lifestyle manager or domestic secretary according to the experts at London's leading lifestyle management company - buy:time.

They have received a surge in demand of late from clients asking for a 'life organiser' or personal assistant - in essence, someone who can eliminate many of the time-consuming daily tasks and chores involved in running their busy home and social lives. The presence of a lifestyle manager frees up a client's life, therefore allowing them to do what they want to do when not working rather than what they have to do.

According to buy:time, using a lifestyle manager is on the up, especially in London amongst busy executives who, on top of a demanding job, endure long commutes and often manage multiple properties in addition to trying to find time to spend with their family.

Unlike many concierge or lifestyle management companies, buy:time never ties clients in or asks them to pay a membership fee. Clients buy hours as and when they need them and then sit back and let their lifestyle manager take over. In addition to handling regular chores and daily tasks, every buy:time lifestyle manager will give clients' added value advice and practical tips on how to create more time in their lives. Claire Brynteson, buy:time's founder explains, "Our lifestyle managers are highly capable, intelligent people and our clients are amazed at the extent to which our services can enhance the quality of their lives".
